The Wild Wooders Take Over Toad Hall

Toad was in prison being tortured for his villainous crime, so Mole and Badger went to look after Toad Hall while he was gone.

The Mole and the Badger were huddled by the fire on a dark and windy night. ‘what a horrible night it is, dear Badger, but such a warm fire!!’ said the Mole happily. All went silent with no reply from the Badger. Suddenly, out of the blue, a loud noise came from outside. ‘What the flipping frogs is that?’ exclaimed badger jumpily. They listened again... silence.

CRASH!!!!!!

Toad's good friends jumped with fright, somebody had broken in, but it wasn't just one person, surely...

The Mole and the Badger got caught in some furry paws and, suddenly, were hovered over with what felt like millions of sticks!! The sticks rained down over the top of the two and beat down on them!! They felt many paws picking them up and before they knew it they had been chucked out into the cold wind and rain!!

'AAAAAGGGGGGGGGGGHHHHHHHHHHHH!!!!!!!' yelped the two, kicking and shrieking so loud that the whole city would hear them, but of course they didn't as nobody rushed to see the fuss. It was almost tragedy.

The animals taking over were ferrets, weasels and stoats, all savage criminals with evil red eyes and scruffy brown fur almost as jagged as their pointy yellow teeth, also known as the wild, Wild Wooders.

The Wild Wooders took over the whole house, trashing the place. They lived their own lives eating all Toad's food, sleeping through the day, smashing vases and ornaments, now THIS was tragedy. That's what they had been doing the whole time and when they had run out of food and got bored they left, just in time as well as Toad was coming home.

The Toad had been devastated to hear about this when he finally got home...
